Angela Dunbar, Head of Privacy, Information and Knowledge Management, Australian Red Cross

Angela Dunbar is the Head of Privacy, Information and Knowledge Management at the Australian Red Cross, where she leads the organisation's work to mature and simplify information stewardship. With a background in information science and an MBA, Angela brings a multidisciplinary perspective to managing complex privacy challenges across humanitarian operations, corporate services, and community programs. Her work focuses on embedding privacy by design, enhancing data maturity, and building trust through transparent and ethical information practices.

Angela is a recognised thought leader in the Australian data management community, known for her practical insights on operationalising information management in large, mission-driven organisations. She is passionate about making privacy accessible and meaningful—especially in contexts where vulnerable communities are involved—and regularly contributes to sector-wide conversations.
